

5 Ways You Can Improve Your Sentence Structure in Essays (2021)

Essays are one of the common tasks which are given to students at the school and college level to check their writing skills. There are several different types of essays and each one of them has a different purpose. An essay is a type of academic writing that tests the research skills of the students along with how well they can describe things in their own words. The different types of essays include:

Persuasive essay: In these essays, the writer has to persuade the reader regarding their point of view. The type of vocabulary used by the essay writer in this kind of essay is convincing and persuading.

Argumentative essay: It is similar to persuasive essays but in this, the writer has to either write for the topic or against it. They have to provide evidence for all the arguments that they present in this essay.

Narrative essay: These are the type of essays in which there is a central point of the story and there is a single motif for which the essay is being written. You have to describe all the events, characters, and experiences that revolve around that single motif on which the essay is based.

Expository essay: This academic writing demands the writer to investigate an idea and provide all the details related to that particular idea in the essay. The discussion could also include a concept or an object and the writer will have to evaluate evidence regarding the topic chosen for this essay.

These are the four main types of essays that students are assigned at the college level. Other forms of the essays include college application essays and a personal statement which too follows the same format of an essay.

5 ways through which the sentence structure of all essays could be improved

The writer needs to ensure that the sentence structure, grammar, and punctuation of the essay is perfect as it shows the instructor that the writer is familiar with the basics of the language. Important tips for improving sentence structure include:

Vary the length of your sentences

The writer should neither write short sentences nor very lengthy sentences. The length of the sentences should be appropriate as short sentences make your writing appear clunky and the reader might get bored soon. Similarly, if the sentences are too long they become meaningless for the reader and the value of the sentence may get lost.

Use linking word in your sentences

Using linking words in your sentences makes things clear for the reader. By including these words it is easier for the reader to see the comparison the writer is trying to make in their essays. Another advantage of the linking words is that it connects the points logically and brings quality to your writing. Some of the frequently used linking words include In addition, Furthermore, Similarly, and Moreover.

Each idea should be written in one sentence

One idea should be discussed in one sentence. Discussing more than one idea in a sentence creates confusion for the reader and makes it difficult for them to understand the message which the writer is trying to convey. The writer should also ensure that they do not write long sentences to describe one idea they could break long sentences into medium-sized sentences that make sense.

Always keep in mind the main idea

Complex sentences are important to use in academic writing. Using complex sentences that carry away the writer from the main idea of the essay should not be used extensively in essay writing.

Read your work out loud

To improve the sentence structure of your essay the writer should read their work out loud so that they may point out any mistakes which they have unintentionally made.

The trend of essay writing services online has significantly increased in the past decade. Students just have to tell free essay writer to write essay for me and the work of students is completed within hours.